Build tools have to be slow if they are going to complete your build. VisualGDB is a build tool and it does a lot more than simply build your project. By using features that are unique to CMake, and some built-in functionality of Visual Studio, VisualGDB provides all of the same build automation support but does it so much faster. Support is really good. For example, when VisualGDB can build a project, the build process runs quickly, but you have to wait for the output to be generated before you can see the failure or success for a specific line of code. I would like to see this automated so you can see the output before you run the build.

This would allow you to make changes to the file and test them out before building and before you even see the red tape that Visual Studio generates. VisualGDB's source code is written in Java and Visual Studio is written in Visual Basic. Luckily these two languages don't have any serious problems communicating with each other: Both are object oriented, data structures have natural equivalents in the other language, and the general programming features are the same. VisualGDB License Key supports advanced CMake project subsystems with two-way synchronization between CMakeLists files and Solution Explorer, allowing you to perform multiple functions. That takes the dynamic profiling and analysis of Linux software to a whole new level. I want to thank everyone who toiled over or contributed to getting the files in order for the Visual Studio and VisualGDB environment. I have VS2013 Professional and eval copy of VisualGDB. Im going to purchase the Embedded version when my evaluation period expires. I inquired about senior or disabled discounts and was informed that only validated students or quantities in bundles of 10 or more qualify (anybody want to go in on a group buy). My experience was relatively pain free.
